Dreward in a Squail.

ROCKLAND, ME., May 6.—The schooner Racket, from the port of Hampden, Captain McLane, capsized in a squail off Camden, on Wednesday night. Captain Lane, who was in the cabin at the time, was drowned. The only other man on board was a deck hand and he succeeded in getting to shore.

It is great question at issue, political excitement becomes more and more intense, and there are great fears entertained, both in public and private to dispose of more formal matters very speedily. One hour lost in useless speech making by each member would cause the loss of two hundred hours, or ten working days. Unless the formal business of the convention were dispatched at once, the lay delegates, at the close of two weeks, would go home and all important questions postponed would be necessarily hastily considered, and many could have no share in the disposition of most imboard was a deck hand and he succeeded in getting to shore.
